JUNCE RUMNY in "ONE GO D TUEN DESERVES ANOTHER."

Judge Rummy, feeling and looking very dejected, is discovered outside of his home, debating with himself enother he dare enter or not. He sannt muster up sufficient courage to face his wife after his/all night absence on the jury, and walks away.

As he walks saily along, he meets Silk Hat Harry, who greets him with "Why so sad, Rummy?" The judge tells the whole sad story to his best friend. Silk Hat Harry gets an inspiration, and gives Rummy the benefit of it. He suggests to the Judge that if he fill bring a box of chocolates to his wife, he need have no fear of entering his domicile.

The lies appeals to the judge, and he proceeds to carry it out. We next see him strutting proudly along, an immense box of chocolates under his arm. We alsoget a glimpse of his wife, armed with a strut rolling pin, vaiting to greet him. The Judge, however, does not know suything about that.

He enters, and the chocolates do not make any difference in his welcome. In fact, she not only throws him cut of the boise, but throws the chocolates after him.

Again Judge Rummy sets forth, and again he neets Sil Hat Harry. Upon being questioned as to the efficacy of the suggestion, the Judge mays "Great, I'm out for the evening."

Harry decides that since the idea worked out so well with his friend, it surely will have similar results in his own case, and investately proceeds to put it into practice. He buys a similar box of chocolates and rushes home, a vision of his glad welcome by his wife running through his brain.

His numerous family see his coming, and all rush into the house to tell Mrs Silk Hat Harry that "Pop" iscoming. Pop hasn't been home for a month.

Mrs Harry doesn't take the time to find the rolling pin; she is frying something on the stove hen the nest is broken to her. She just lifts the stove, and upon Harry's entrance, throws it at him. The chocolates follow him as he goes sadly away. He continues ealking until he resches a certain park tench, on shich is already seated the Judge, count asleep.

LAMPCONS

A series of slaver sayings, gibes, jests, and jokes; chipped from the press of the world, about twelve in all.
